WHITE HOUSE CHIEF OF STAFF NOT QUITTING

1 White House chief of staff John Kelly slapped down rumors that he was about to resign or be fired and said his push to bring more order to the West Wing does not extend to controlling President Donald Trump or his social media habits. In a rare appearance before reporters, the retired general sought to project an aura of calm in a White House that has been criticized as chaotic. "Unless things change, I'm not quitting, I'm not getting fired and I don't think I'll fire anyone tomorrow," he said. Kelly replaced Trump's first chief of staff, Reince Priebus, after a tumultuous first six months in office and sought to bring order to an often chaotic operation at the White House. Under his watch, Trump parted ways with other top officials, while new restrictions were set to streamline meetings and material for the president.

WHITE NATIONALISTS SUED OVER PROTEST VIOLENCE

2 Eleven people have sued white nationalists whose rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, turned deadly this summer, saying they suffered emotional and physical trauma from protesters' threats and violence. The federal lawsuit filed in Charlottesville late on Wednesday seeks damages from 25 white nationalist individuals and groups alleged to be involved in the Aug. 12 protest, including activist Richard Spencer. It also requests a court order banning them from staging similar rallies. Those named in the suit went to Charlottesville "to terrorize its residents, commit acts of violence, and use the town as a backdrop to showcase for the media and the nation a neo-nationalist agenda," the suit said. Spencer and one of the groups, the Traditionalist Worker Party, did not respond to requests for comment on Thursday.

DHS SECRETARY NOMINEE

3 President Donald Trump shakes the hand of White House Deputy Chief of Staff Kirstjen Nielsen during a nomination announcement at the East Room of the White House on Thursday in Washington, D.C. President Trump has nominated Nielsen to be the next homeland security secretary, the position that has been left vacant by Chief of Staff John Kelly.

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

SIX INJURED IN ESCAPE ATTEMPT AT NC PRISON

4 An escape attempt involving fires at a North Carolina prison left several employees injured on Thursday and authorities placed the facility on lockdown, officials said. The situation at the Pasquotank Correctional Institution in Elizabeth City was under control, the state Department of Public Safety said on Twitter, less than two hours after sending out an alert on social media about the incident. The fires were set in the sewing plant at the prison and have been extinguished, the public safety agency said. Few other details were immediately available about the incident at the prison in the northeast part of the state. Sentara Albemarle Medical Center in Elizabeth City received six patients injured in the incident, the hospital said in a statement. It did not provide any details on their conditions.

NEW HACK, EQUIFAX TAKES DOWN HELP PAGE

5 Equifax has taken one of its customer help web pages offline as its security team looks into reports of another potential cyber breach at the credit reporting company, which recently disclosed a hack that compromised the sensitive information of 145.5 million people. The move came after an independent security analyst on Wednesday found part of Equifax's website was under the control of attackers trying to trick visitors into installing fraudulent Adobe Flash updates that could infect computers with malware. "We are aware of the situation identified on the equifax.com website in the credit report assistance link," spokesman Wyatt Jefferies said. "Our IT and security teams are looking into this matter, and out of an abundance of caution have temporarily taken this page offline."

John McCain to receive Liberty Medal in Philly

The senator, presidential candidate and fighter pilot will be honored for his life of service on Monday.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Sen. John McCain will receive the Liberty Medal at the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia on Monday.

The Arizona Republican was announced as this year's recipient of the prestigious award July 6 — just two weeks before he announced he had been diagnosed with brain cancer.

"It has been my greatest privilege in life to swear an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, beginning with my enlistment in the Navy and continuing through my service in the United States Senate," McCain said of the medal. "Each time I have raised my right hand, I do so with enormous weight of the people who elected me to serve."

McCain has been seen as a key Republican in the first year of Donald Trump's presidency. After his cancer diagnosis, he returned to the Senate floor twice to vote against Republican Obamacare replacements. When he ran for president against Barack Obama in 2008 and against George W. Bush in 2000, he rode a campaign bus dubbed the "Straight Talk Express."

McCain will receive the medal from none other than Obama's former vice president, Joe Biden.

"In our over two decades serving together in the United States Senate, there were few others I could count on to be as honest, respectful and decent as John," Biden said in a statement. "His heroic sacrifice for his country and dedicated service to his constituents are unquestionable and unmatched."

The significance of having a Democrat and Republican onstage together was not lost on organizers of the event.

It "exemplifies the nonpartisan spirit of the National Constitution Center," said the Center's CEO and president, Jeffrey Rosen.

"In these polarized times, it's more important than ever to unite public servants of different perspectives," he said.

McCain has served in the Senate since 1986. He is revered as a veteran for his time as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

"On Oct. 26, 1967, McCain's plane was shot down over Hanoi during a bombing mission," the Center said. "He was captured and spent years in a Vietnamese prisoner of war camp being tortured by his captors. Despite the torture he endured, McCain refused the opportunity for early release until all of his fellow soldiers were released. For his heroism, Sen. McCain has received 17 military awards and decorations, including the Silver Star, the Navy Commendation Medal and the Bronze Star."

Past Liberty Medal recipients included Malala Yousafzai, the Dalai Lama, U.S. Rep. John Lewis and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

Moldy school in Germantown to remain closed during repairs

John B. Kelley Elementary School in Germantown. GOOGLE MAPS

A Germantown elementary school will remain closed Friday and possibly longer until a mold problem in the school's walls is fixed, the School District of Philadelphia announced Thursday.

Mold was discovered at John B. Kelley Elementary School on Wednesday and the school was promptly shut down.

"Due to heating, ventilation and air-conditioning issues and condensation damage, traces of mold were found in several classrooms," the school district said Thursday.

The district said it would again update school families on Sunday at 5 p.m., but it "will not reopen the school until it is mold-free."

Mold can cause nasal stuffiness, throat irritation, coughing or wheezing, eye irritation and skin irritation, particularly among children.

Students have been asked to report to Hill Freedman World Academy at 1100 Mt. Pleasant Ave. while repairs are conducted by what the district described as "a highly qualified and experienced environmental remediation contractor."

The Philly teachers union called the mold an example of "unacceptable" conditions in city schools and said "the district's approach to managing school building conditions has proven costly, dangerous and disruptive to our students and school staff."

"The PFT and staff at J.B. Kelly reported mold and other issues to the district long before it became a news story this week," Philly Federation of Teachers (PFT) officials said. "Instead of taking proactive — and cost-effective — steps to remediate the mold when it was first reported, the district allowed the situation to worsen to the point that the school had to be closed to address the issue."

What Trump's executive order on healthcare means for you

New rules will allow people to go over state lines for insurance coverage.

MEAGAN MORRIS
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

President Trump signed an executive order weakening Obamacare. GETTY IMAGES

On Thursday morning, President Trump signed an executive order to "save the American people from the nightmare of Obamacare" by gutting some of the rules of the Affordable Care Act.

Under the Trump healthcare executive order, small businesses — and possibly individuals — can band together to form associations that make it easier for them to go across state lines to purchase healthcare plans exempt from Obamacare requirements that all health plans must cover essential health benefits.

The new rules — that come just days after Trump changed another Obamacare mandate requiring companies to pay for birth control — will "create tremendous competition" among insurance providers to drive down premium costs, creating a marketplace where insurance companies will be "begging for your business," he said.

Premiums for plans under Obamacare average $378 a month, according to eHealth, an insurance marketplace. That's an 18 percent increase from 2016.

The executive order also directs the Departments of Health and Human services, Labor and the Treasury to "increase choice and access to lower-cost and higher quality healthcare options," Trump said during a news conference.

The executive order won't take effect for several months, according to some estimates — and there will likely be legal challenges — so current insurance rules will stay put for the time being. Critics say the new rules will create more problems because they take away state oversight on insurance plans, allowing them to provide leaner coverage.

"President Trump's healthcare executive order may seem a little complicated so let me break it down: It's sabotage," Sen. Tim Kaine of Virginia wrote on Twitter before the news conference.

"It would allow cheap low-quality plans onto the market that could discriminate against people with pre-existing conditions, seniors, women," the former vice presidential candidate added. "It aims to push healthy people onto junk plans, leaving only the sick or at-risk on ACA plans — essentially destroying the insurance market."

Discoveries have been made in the search for a cure to the common cold. ISTOCK

Is a cure for the common cold finally coming?

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control estimates that most of us suffer through two or three colds a year — and we do suffer because there's no singular medication or vaccination that can cure the common cold.

But it might happen. Research published earlier this year in the journal Nature Communications said that new antiviral drugs that fight against the common cold could be designed within the next 10 years.

For the research, scientists looked at the genetic material of human parechovirus, a virus that is similar to the common cold. They then used mathematical modeling and other research to find that the virus relies on a "hidden code" to replicate across its genome.

"The coding works like the cogwheels in a Swiss watch. We now need a drug that has the same effect as pouring sand into the watch; every part of the viral mechanism could be disabled," Professor Peter Stockley at the University of Leeds told CNN.

Protesters to greet Rick Perry in Philly

Trump's energy secretary is coming to town and protesters will be greeting him.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

President Donald Trump's secretary of energy Rick Perry, who previously called for the abolition of that very department, will be in Philadelphia on Friday morning to speak with energy industry leaders at a forum.

The forum, Reliable Resources: Finding Energy Stability in an Unpredictable World, was organized by the Chamber of Commerce for Greater Philadelphia and will bring together public- and private-sector energy heavyweights to the Hilton Philadelphia at Penn's Landing Friday morning.

"This program will dive into what makes Greater Philadelphia a prominent and stable region across energy sectors," the Chamber said in its event listing.

However, left-wing protesters with Refuse Fascism Philly have been organizing to bring protesters to the Hilton on Friday.

"Rick Perry, a climate change-denying and science-denying Christian fascist, has no business serving in ANY governmental capacity — much less Energy Secretary!" they wrote on the Facebook page for the event, which they described as an 'emergency protest for the planet and all its inhabitants.'

Protesters in particular took issue with Perry's June comments on climate change, when he stated, "The science isn't settled yet. I tend to say, okay, let's have a conversation and get these guys together."

With the fracking boom seemingly over for now in Pennsylvania and civic leaders discussing reshaping the region into "an energy hub," the energy sector in the region is more primed than ever for national attention, the Chamber said.

"As the home to numerous major refineries, including the largest oil-refining complex on the U.S. Eastern seaboard," the Chamber said in a statement, "a wealth of interstate pipeline connectivity and several natural gas pipeline projects in the planning stages or under construction, Greater Philadelphia has the necessary tools to remain a reliable hub in the industry."

SANCTUARY CITIES

Four US 'sanctuary cities' may be violating law: Attorney General Sessions

The United States Justice Department singled out four cities and a county on Thursday for allegedly having so-called "sanctuary policies" that may violate a federal law that says local governments cannot limit information sharing with U.S. immigration officials.

The department said New York City, New Orleans, Philadelphia and Cook County in Illinois, along with its largest city Chicago "have preliminarily been found" to have policies that violate the law. It is giving those jurisdictions until Oct. 27 to provide evidence demonstrating compliance.

If the government finds the cities and county are violating the statute that calls for information sharing with federal immigration officials, it says it could cut federal funds for law enforcement.

The determinations came after the Justice Department earlier in the year had asked several local jurisdictions to detail their compliance with the law in order to make a determination about their eligibility for certain federal grants.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said in a statement that the cities still in the department's crosshairs "adopt the view that the protection of criminal aliens is more important than the protection of law-abiding citizens and of the rule of law."

The sanctuary jurisdictions say they are following the law, which says local authorities cannot prevent information exchange with federal immigration agents about people's immigration status.

Some of the disputes concern the jurisdictions' compliance with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement "detainer" requests, sent to local authorities when ICE wants to hold people in custody up to 48 hours and beyond when they are supposed to be released so that immigration officials can pick them up. Thurgood Marshall's superhero roots

Josh Gad and Chadwick Boseman talk to Metro about a movie for everyone.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroPhilly
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Despite being obviously timely, "Marshall" actors Chadwick Boseman and Josh Gad are reticent to talk up the film's importance. Instead, the pair were quick to insist the number of other reasons why they were initially attracted to the film.

"I did it because I enjoyed the script and enjoyed who I got to work with," Boseman explains. "I wanted to work with Reggie [Hudlin, director] and I wanted to tell the story of Thurgood Marshall. Yes, he's important. But I also think he's a cool dude. He was cool for what he did. He was cool because he fought for justice. He was courageous, arrogant and selfless. When you start talking about how important movies are, it's like, 'You have to see the movie!' But you don't want to see it. And I knew this was a movie people would want to see."

Josh Gad, who plays lawyer Sam Friedman to Boseman's Marshall, adds, "I think it's important without being self-righteous. And that's what I really respect about it. This really is a movie for everybody. At the same time it is covering this incredible period of history and this incredible journey before he is the man in the robes. It's the origin movie of a superhero. It takes place in 1941, but it could just as easily take place in 2017. There's something eerily familiar about it."

What stood out for you about the script?

Boseman told us, "Biopics is what people pitch to me. And when I was told to read the script I was like, 'This is my third. I don't know,' but when I eventually read it I just saw a Western. This is Marshall coming into town to implement justice. I saw a buddy, not a cop movie — a buddy attorney movie. I saw a who-dunnit. I could forget that it was about Thurgood Marshall."

What's unique about making a biopic?

"I feel the pressure initially," said Boseman. "Once I've taken it on I'm somehow able to push that pressure off and then dive into the process and do the part. I always try to find the things that are human and that I can identify with. Then I look for things that aren't like me and that I need to really hone in on. It's making sure that I have a plethora of information that's available to me."

Does Hollywood have a responsibility to tell stories like these?

"To a certain extent," says Gad. "One of the things that makes art so powerful is that it can be a reflection of the times and humanity and of who we are at any given time. Now there are definitely issues to be reflected back at us so we can have the difficult discussions. It's tricky, though, because you never want to be preachy about it. You always want to be respectful and do your job, which is to simultaneously entertain while giving the audience something to chew on. So I think that if you achieve that you are ahead of the game."

GETTY IMAGES

Did you speak to the family of Thurgood Marshall?

"I decided to join the film after I received a letter from John Marshall (Thurgood's son) saying he wanted me to take the role," says Boseman. "That was instrumental and it broke down some barriers. Because part of my reservation was that I thought I didn't look like Thurgood. At that point me and Reggie discussed the appearance of the character. 'Do we change the complexion of the character? Should I wear a moustache?' We decided that stuff wasn't important, and we decided to try and bring the essence of the man out of me."

"Marshall" will be in movie theaters on October 13.

"The Meyerowitz Stories"

Director: Noah Baumbach
Stars: Adam Sandler, Ben Stiller

Adam Sandler might just be a decent actor after all. For every "Punch-Drunk Love," "Reign Over Me" and "Funny People," there are half a dozen more like "Just Go With It," "Grown Ups" and "Jack And Jill." But "The Meyerowitz Stories" may be the ultimate proof of the acting heights that Sandler can reach, as he embodies the pent-up aggression, frustrations and indomitable spirit of Danny Meyerowitz in a hilarious fashion. Sandler is the finest example of writer and director Noah Baumbach's pitch-perfect casting. Wry and observant while just about avoiding any pretentious pitfalls, "The Meyerowitz Stories" is ultimately so delightful that it rivals "Okja" as the best Netflix release to date.

"Goodbye Christopher Robin"

Director: Simon Curtis
Stars: Domhnall Gleeson, Margot Robbie

I wasn't expecting to like "Goodbye Christopher Robin." Halfway into the drama, I was only pleasantly entertained. But while the movie spends a bunch of time establishing its characters and setting relationships, it's not until the last hour that screenwriters Frank Cottrell-Boyce and Simon Vaughan really sink their teeth into the subject matter, probing the instant success of the books in a surprisingly powerful and emotional manner. "Goodbye Christopher Robin" forgoes any subtly, going in hard on its dramatic cues, but Curtis is so lean and focused on the heart, intent and themes of the film that it builds into a captivating and truly touching experience. ●●●◐○

Prejudice against African-Americans and Jews is at the forefront of this stunning biopic on the life of Thurgood Marshall. And it's buoyed by an absolutely incredible cast. Those of you that are somehow yet to be charmed or convinced by Chadwick Boseman will have no more excuses after "Marshall," as he is a force of nature, while his patter and partnership with Gad is particularly delightful. Reginald Hudlin's sleek direction meshes perfectly with Boseman's confidence, too, and helps to glide over the film's shortcomings, which ultimately makes for a lively and more than palatable experience. Long, monotonous week? Yeah, we hear you. That's why you should kick off your weekend right by attending the 2nd Annual Arts at Night event at The Piazza at Schmidt's Commons.

The focus of the Friday the 13th happening is performance art and more than 20 of Philadelphia's talented artists will perform burlesque, aerial work, fire spinning and more.

"This is the second time we're producing this event to bring the arts into The Piazza at Schmidt's Commons. There is so much local talent in this city, that we wanted to showcase all that this city has to offer," says Krystal Souvanlasy, event coordinator at The Piazza at Schmidt's Commons. "Artists will not only be showcasing their work for purchase, but will be creating masterpieces right in front of you to show their process and show off their talent."

Here are five acts you can't miss:

Peek-A-Boo Review

This Philadelphia neo-burlesque troupe has been together since 1998 and every month, they present a new show that's only for adults. Audiences can expect a blend of cabaret and burlesque, complete with singing, dancing and comedy.

Lux Arati

Love fire? Love dance? Be prepared to be dazzled by Lux Arati, Philadelphia's all female fire and dance troupe. Since 2011, they've been combining Middle Eastern belly dance with modern styles like hip hop and fire spinning.

The kids' trays at The Sidecar Bar & Grille are adorbs. PROVIDED

The Sidecar Bar & Grille makes brunch more kid-friendly

They've also added more items for grownups too.

JENNIFER LOGUE
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Brunch is typically associated with twenty-somethings recovering from hangovers with decadent food and even more decadent cocktails. The Sidecar Bar & Grille has decided to shake up that conception entirely, however, by making brunch an experience for the whole family. Beginning Saturday, Oct. 14, they're starting brunch service earlier, adding a Rival Bros.Coffee Happy Hour, new kids' trays and more.

"Chef Brian and I are both dads so we understand the struggles of weekend mornings with young children," says General Manager, Jonathan Makar. "The kids are awake and hungry by 7:30 am. There aren't many kid-friendly, early morning dining options in our neighborhood."

While the young and single prefer boozy brunches, people with kids could always use extra caffeine. The addition of the Rival Bros. Coffee Happy Hour will feature cups of coffee for just 25 cents between 8 a.m. and 9 a.m.

You can even blissfully sip away as your children immerse themselves in their kids' tray, which features a coloring placement and crayons. What's more, the meal options for kids are healthy and hands-on, with each entree being served with cheese, fruit, wheat thins and organic apple juice. Entrees for kids include cereal & milk ($5), apples & peanut Butter ($5), little pancakes ($6), oatmeal ($5), two hard-boiled eggs ($5) or sausages ($6).

"We wanted to create a tray that offers a well-balanced meal but also keeps the kids entertained so parents can enjoy a cup of coffee and a sit-down breakfast with the whole family," says Makar.

And of course, there are plenty of scrumptious brunch options for grownups, too. Sidecar classics include the buttermilk biscuit & gravy ($10), bbq pork benedict ($14), and buttermilk biscuit sandwich ($10). New additions to the menu include the kinky burger (two patties, crispy poached egg, gruyere and truffle mayo) for $11 and the kale caesar salad (baby kale, garlic-infused caesar dressing, croutons and Parmigiana Reggiano) for $12.

There will even be a crepe du jour being offered during brunch for only $12. On top of all this, guests will enjoy complimentary baskets of scones, biscotti and nut bread with whipped butter and jam.

"Sometimes brunch should be a family affair," says Makar. "And now it will be, at The Sidecar Bar & Grille."

NFL best bets: Week 6

Cleveland Browns at Houston Texans (-10)

The Browns have lost 15 straight road contests, covering on just three occasions and look like a bad bet once more on Sunday. They encounter a Texans defense that just lost JJ Watt and Whitney Mercilus for the rest of the season, but Cleveland has cracked the 20-point plateau just once all year (against the hapless Colts). Now they're faced with a quarterback conundrum of sorts, as DeShone Kizer was benched last week in favor of Kevin Hogan, who held his own in the second half against the Jets in a 17-14 defeat.

No matter their decision, Houston's offense is far more dynamic thanks to rookie sensation DeShaun Watson. The Texans are 3-1 ATS in games started by Watson this year and have averaged over 44 PPG in their last three contests.

Expect Houston to dominate the time of possession battle en route to a comfortable victory at home.

The pick: Texans -10

Pittsburgh Steelers at Kansas City Chiefs (-4.5)

The Chiefs have won and covered in all five games they've played this season and should run that streak up to six against the underachieving Steelers.

Kansas City has the number-one scoring offense in the league and is poised to take advantage of a glaring mismatch in the ground game. The Chiefs' rushing attack, led by Kareem Hunt, is the NFL's second-best by YPG and will face the league's fourth-worst run stoppers. Pittsburgh has the best pass-stopping unit in football, but Alex Smith is having a career-year, leading the league's 10th-best aerial attack.

Age appears to be catching up to Ben Roethlisberger, who threw five INTs to the Jaguars at home last week. Le'Veon Bell has been solid but not spectacular this year, with just one 100-yard game under his belt through five weeks. His longest carry this season is just 21 yards. It's hard to envision the Steelers matching strides with the league's best team on the road.

The pick: Chiefs -4.5

New York Giants at Denver Broncos (-11.5)

Eli Manning faces a daunting task opposing Denver's defense without Odell Beckham Jr. and Brandon Marshall (both of whom are lost for the season) and possibly Sterling Shepard (considered day-to-day). The Giants average less than 78 YPG rushing, so their run game can't be counted on either.

New York's defense should receive a heavy dose of CJ Anderson and the Broncos' third-rated rushing attack, as the Giants have been highly vulnerable on the ground through five games (29th by YPG).

This should enable the Broncos to control the clock, as they usually do (fourth in the NFL by time of possession). Expect Denver to prevail in a lopsided affair on Sunday night.

The pick: Broncos -11.5

Wells Fargo Center undergoes impressive 'digital transformation'

The Sixers and Flyers are each up and coming — appealing to a young demographic as befits the youthful rosters itching to break through.

The home of these two teams, the Wells Fargo Center, is up and coming as well, even as the facility passes 20 years since being completed in 1996.

In 2017-18, the arena now boasts 19,800 square feet of signage throughout, the most of any arena in the country. Walk into one of the two entrance bowls and you'll be overwhelmed by LED screens.

Why the transformation? Well, watching at home is pretty easy and broadcasts in high definition are better than they've ever been. The Center is keeping up with the Jonses.

"To a certain extent," Wells Fargo Center President John Page told Metro of their motivation to make improvements. "But there's still nothing like the live event. Being here in person to experience your favorite artist or your favorite team, nothing replaces that. Obviously what happens at home is significant. It's easy to sit on your couch so anything we can do to enhance the experience and give the wow factor is something we strive for."

The last two years have seen the Wells Fargo Center host an NCAA Eastern Regional and the Democratic National Convention. EVAN MACY

There will be volumes of people at the South Broad Street facility this year, as the Sixers and Flyers could be playing in front of max capacity in their 41 respective home games this year. The 76ers sold out their season ticket supply quickly after the team traded for the No. 1 overall pick (which was used to take Markelle Fultz).

The facility is also boasting a new line of merchandise for each team, as well as some new culinary treats throughout the arena including the twisted taco, mac and cheese balls, and a fried rice station.

"I think when you look at what the Sixers have in their line up, those guys are great players and we expect it," Page said, emphasizing that he expects playoff games in both the NBA and NHL to be held at Wells Fargo Center. "They're young just like the Flyers. There are going to be some growing pains but it's the future."

The Flyers open their home schedule Saturday, October 14 against the Capitals while the Sixers are home a week later, hosting the Celtics on Friday, October 20.

Preseason game that shook the world: A look at Embiid's debut

Joel Embiid was an absolute revelation in Wednesday's preseason win against the Nets.

EVAN MACY

Joel Embiid continues to show what he can do — when healthy. GETTY IMAGES

For 14 minutes Wednesday night, the Sixers were the most exciting team in the NBA.

NBC Sports Philly, which had no plans to televise the Sixers and Nets preseason duel on Long Island, quickly scraped together their broadcast team in their South Philly studio to call the game remotely.

Basketball fans from across the country clung to Twitter to follow the game along in real time.

All of this, because Joel Embiid was playing.

In just 14 minutes of game action the 7-foot-2 behemoth tallied 22 points, seven rebounds and a devastating blocked shot. In 36 minutes, that rate is 57 points and 18 boards.

Embiid changed every single play he was on the floor for. His agility and adept foot work flashing dream shakes and turnaround jumpers. His shooting touch from midrange and downtown on display — particularly on a 32 foot three he made that didn't count due to a time out. He got rebounds. He dived on the floor. He got to the free throw line a ridiculous 18 times making 14. It was everything you could have wanted.

The hyperbole grew. All over Twitter and social media, fans and sportswriters were saying the Sixers got it right. Two days prior, with Embiid's injury-prognosis looking grim, Philly stepped up signing the 23-year-old to a five-year contract worth $148 million. Then he was upgraded to probable. Then he actually played.

Was it all a ploy from Embiid's camp to get his deal done? Will Embiid be healthy and ready to play this season?

Ben Simmons, J.J. Redick and Dario Saric each had impressive performances themselves in the 19-point thumping. The future has never looked brighter for the Sixers. The regular season starts in less than a week, an ESPN 7 p.m. start in Washington on Wednesday October 18. Is the Process working? We're finally close to being able to answer that question.

Aries Make plans or arrangements to do something that is fun, entertaining or that will encourage you to make better life choices.

Taurus Situations will escalate if you fall short of what's expected of you. Don't let work or domestic responsibilities clash. Refuse to share secrets with a colleague.

Gemini Handle your financial and business affairs carefully. Overspending or making unrealistic promises will leave you in a sticky situation. Offer creative solutions.

Cancer Your kindness will lead to trouble if you trust a smooth-talking individual. Put your time and cash into personal gains and romancing someone you love.

Leo You'll face emotional controversy at home or when dealing with institutions, government agencies or authority figures. Stick to the rules to avoid a precarious position.

Virgo Don't be tempted to take part in something just because you want to impress someone or be near him or her. Take a pass, but be there to help when things fall apart.

Libra Don't overanalyze. Live in the moment and deal with matters as they arise. Don't make life more complicated than it is. Keep life simple and your goals reasonable.

Scorpio An unrealistic promise will put you in a compromising position. Use common sense when making decisions that could influence your reputation or ability to advance.

Sagittarius Simplify matters by living within your means and only taking on what you can handle. Underestimating the cost involved in a project will leave you in a bad position.

Capricorn You or someone you are dealing with will overreact. Protect important relationships and do your best to keep the peace. A physical challenge will ease stress.

Aquarius Put your passwords and anything else that matters in a safe place. Someone will take advantage of you if you are too gullible about your personal business.

Pisces Money and emotions won't mix. A deal is only as good as the work you are willing to put in to make it succeed. Take positive action. EUGENIA LAST
